Dear Mr Steven Edmund Winduo

I’d first like to thank you for expressing your emotions, thoughts, and feelings throughout the ink of your pen. It’s a wonderful gift for me to read such a great poem, “The Dancer.” I enjoyed every bit of your poem.

I would like to say that I enjoyed the subject of your poem the most, the dancer. Just the subject of this poem has so much emotion and vigorous feeling lying within the name itself. A dancer, a person who uses their body to express himself or herself is a wonderful way to embody the feelings being expressed. I derived passion, heat, envy, love, and energy from the lines of your poem. The lines, “Finger tips of flames”, bring these emotions out to me through the personification of the flames being fingers that can reach out and touch people. The calling of the people to join the dance is an inspiring line telling everyone to live and love with all the energy of the dance. To lay dormant is to die again as even the ancestors are being called. I love that because I think that is a very good way to lead your life. I also like the way that in association with all of these energetic emotions, you incorporate the sense of peace and harmony through the line, “In solitude with the spirits.”

I hope that you will continue writing your poems because you have many people that enjoy your work. Thank you for your time.

Sincerely

Karsten Zane (signed)

WAR WITHOUT END

This war was not like any other war, 1
it was world-wide and it was never done, thousands died each year, and thousands more robbed of all sweetness underneath the sun.

The front-line ran through every road and street, 5
they died alone, in small groups (most were young),
no general ordered up a balance-sheet
to justify torn limbs and silent tongue.

This war was not like any other war,
there was no enemy with a foreign face, 10
we could not see what all the fuss was for
- when someone died, it was some other place

The rusting junk-yards were not on our maps,
the rehab hospitals off-limits too,
we could not ever imagine that perhaps 15
someday our wheels and us might join the queue

And daily still, in sunshine and in rain, 17
the ambulances with their strident cries sort out the barely living from the slain,
while, all invisibly, our future dies.

Genghis Khan, it’s said, composed a hill 20
of skulls as tribute to his conquering hand
-he knew what he was doing; when we kill
we can only say we do not understand.

Autobiography case study – Albert Maori Kiki

Sir Albert Maori Kiki was born in 1931. His father was from Orokolo in the coastal area of Gulf Province and his mother belonged to the Parevavo people who live on the banks of the Purari River in the mountains before the Purari enters the swampy plains of Gulf Province.

Albert Maori Kiki managed to get an education, finishing his schooling at Sogeri High School. He went on to do medical training in Fiji and qualified as a pathologist. Later he became a patrol officer before he entered politics. He was one of the founders of the Pangu Party, which demanded ‘home rule leading to eventual independence’ for New Guinea. After the 1972 elections he entered parliament, and was appointed Minister for Lands and Environment in Sir Michael Somare’s first government. He was Deputy Prime Minister from 1975 until 1977.

His autobiography was published in 1968 by F.W. Cheshire but there is an edition in print today published by Pearson. It was the first autobiography by a Papua New Guinean and is one of the most important books ever to come out of PNG. Albert Kiki Maori died in 1993.

QUESTION 14
The phrase ‘home rule’ in line 7 can also mean ____________
A. a government run by Papua New Guineans.
B. a government led by Pangu before Independence.

For questions 16 and 17, refer to the text below.

Ulli, a phenomin

In the late 1960s, in the backyard of a bleak, suburban house in Port Moresby, the newly established University of Papua New Guinea constructed a studio, ambitiously titled, the “Centre for New Guinea Cultures.” Here, Akis drew his exuberant animals, Matias Kauage beat his copper panels, Avavo Kavo carved contemporary hohao boards, Marie Taita Aihi designed textiles, and Ruki Fame worked on welded iron sculptures.

Meanwhile, at the university, a course in creative writing was established, an active drama group came to life, the Papua Pocket Poets series commenced, and Kovave, a journal of New Guinea literature was born. So was the beginning of the life of Austrian anthropologist-poet-art historian—impressario. Ulli Beier, in Papua New Guinea and precisely at the University of Papua New Guinea.

Ulli Beier arrived in Port Moresby in 1967, and in his book Decolonising the Mind he is described as a catalyst for the growth in contemporary indigenous literature and art in Papua New Guinea.

Ulli Beier took up lecturership at UPNG under the leadership of first vice chancellor John Gunther, excited with the possibilities of embracing, nurturing and promoting a rich artistic and literary culture. In his foreword of Decolonizing the Mind, Peter Trist writes, “Ulli’s energy in those early years was phenomenal: he conducted the University’s courses in literature and creative writing; he published the Papua Pocket Poets series; founded the literacy magazine Kovave, the first devoted to Papua New Guinea artists and writing, and arranged numerous exhibition of the first generation of contemporary Papua New Guinean artists in Port Moresby, Los Angeles, Manila, Bombay and London.”

Ulli Beier and his wife Georgina came to UPNG from the University of Ibadan in Nigeria where they had been since 1950. He pioneered the teaching of African literature, and wrote widely about Yoruba art and society. In 1954, he founded Odu, a journal of Yoruba studies. For the next 12 years, Odu became a forum in which Yorumba Poets, philosophers and kings could discuss their culture. He edited and published Black Orpheus from 1957. This was the first English language magazine of African literature and arts.

At UPNG, Ulli Beier nurtured a group of young Papua New Guineans in his creative writing class. One of his first students was Vincent Eri who went on to become a diplomate and later Governor General of the country. He wrote the first Papua New Guinean novel, The Crocodile.

Ulli Beier writes in Decolonising the Mind. “The creative writing class attracted some of the brightest and certainly the most political conscious students. They were not literati; they were not discussing style and form. They were disinterested in literary trends and fashion. They used literacy as a tool. They were aware that they were the first generation of Papua New Guineans who could talk back at the white man.

QUESTION 16
According to the above text, Ulli Beier’s students reinforced their appreciation of culture and history through

A. copper panel beatings.
B. creative writings.
C. textile designs.
D. dance and drama

QUESTION 17
Which of the following is not mentioned in the text? Ulli Beier

A. conducted creative writing and literature courses.
B. nurtured a group of young PNG nationals
C. pioneered the teaching of young PNG nationals.
D. taught young people at UPNG.

Newspaper Article 1

No fuel for police operations

The continuous fuel shortage for police in East New Britain has been having a direct impact on the communities.

ENB police commander Anthony Wagambie said police at most times found it very difficult to travel out to address law and order problems.

“We have been without fuel supply since the beginning of this year and I have been sourcing fuel for my fleet on a credit basis,” he said.

He said the provincial administration, district administration, and some business houses had assisted police from time to time.

He said those followed recent fights in the Pomio-Baining areas, particularly in the Sinivit local level government.

Wagambie said there was fighting reported in the area where it was alleged that people from Marambu ward had accused some people from Sanban of sorcery.

This, he said, had stopped survey on a project area for oil palm.

According to police reports, the Marambu people were continuously harassing people from Sanban and damaging houses.

QUESTION 18

For questions 24 to 26, refer to the text below.

The railroad was not the first institution to impose regularity on society, or to draw attention to the importance of precise timekeeping. For as long as merchants have set out their wares at the daybreak and communal festivities have been celebrated, people have been in rough agreement with their neighbors as to the time of day. The value of this tradition is today more apparent than ever. Were it not for public acceptance of a single yardstick of time, social life would be unbearably chaotic; the massive daily transfers of goods, services, and information would proceed in fits and starts; the very fabric of modern society would begin to unravel.

Extract from Greg Weiss’ article on Time and Business

QUESTION 24
What is the main idea of the passage?
A. An accepted way of measuring time is essential for all societies.
B. More time must be made available for neighbors.
C. Society judges time according to people’s activities.
D. The traditions of society are timeless.

QUESTION 25
In line 4, the phrase “this tradition” refers to
A. friendly relations between neighbors.
B. people’s agreement on the measurement of time.
C. the practice of starting the business day at dawn.
D. the railroads’ reliance on time schedules.
QUESTION 26
In lines 6 and 7, the sentence …“fabric of modern society would begin to unravel,” implies that
A. modern fabric corporations would crumble.
B. modern societies would disintegrate.
C. the flow of normal daily life in all societies would be chaotic.
D. the structure of society would flow smoothly.

For questions 29 and 30, read the poem on ‘Tourists’ and answer the questions.

TOURISTS
They came to see majestic spectacles
   We live under volcano clouds
   They noticed the volcanic islands
We consider the children of our gods
They explore the corals on our shores
   We fish for our lives there
   They enjoy the sandy beaches
We make money to survive modernity
   They watch our dances
   We do it for our pride
   They wonder how confusing life is
For us, but we will drink our kava
And sing string band music, a mix
Of island music and religious songs
While others dance the Rom dance
   We have seen them come and go
And we went on living as always.

Treasure cultural artefacts

Members of parliament have been urged to treasure the country’s culture and tradition. Julius Violaris, originally from Greece but now a PNG citizen, is president of the National Museum and Art Gallery. The institution is opposing the planned removal of traditional artefacts from Parliament House in Waigani. Violaris said he was proud of Greece because of its diverse culture in tradition. “Ancient Greece had many gods before the christians came into this world,” he said.

Modern Greece had one of the richest cultures in the world.” He said many philosophies originated from the Greek culture and one of them was democracy used today as a system of governance in many countries.

“Many monuments and culture still remain today in Greece. They remain as the pride to the nation,” he said. He said Greece was a living proof that there was no need to destroy the cultural and historical objects in Parliament.

Violaris said Parliament was not a place of worship but a place where leaders met to discuss the affairs of the nation.

He said MPs themselves should set the standard which people could follow. “They should uphold the constitution and one of them is the right to worship.”

“This fundamental right should not be neglected,” he said. “By all means, be a good Christian, cherish your culture and preserve it.

Question 41
Julius Violaris used to be a citizen of ____________.

For questions 51 to 60, read the article on ‘Stamps of Papua New Guinea’, and answer each question.

Story and photographs by Keith Briggs

Stamps of Papua New Guinea

The stamps of Papua New Guinea are equal to any in the world. The main purpose of this little squares of coloured paper is to pay for the carriage of mail. A drab sticker from a machine in the post office will do the same job and cost the department almost nothing, so it is not only for this use that stamps are produced. Stamps are a celebration of the nation, its cultures and achievements. Looking at previous stamp issues shows that PNG has come a long way from when messages were sent across mountain tops, over the great valleys by the sound of the ‘garamut’. The stamps depict radio transceivers, telephones and solar-powered microwave repeater station set on lofty peaks; mail being loaded on to planes. They show the world the sophistication of PNG’s telecommunications network and wide ranging nature of our postal system.

Momentous events like self government, independence or the opening of the new Parliament House were shared with many nations via our stamps. The nutrition stamp issue had a valuable purpose in educating people of the need for a balanced diet. A centenary celebration, recognition of the police force, the army and the scouting movement have each been depicted. An issue honoring early missionaries that these people ventured into isolated areas, to settle, learn local languages and open schools and medical services, while spreading the Gospel, the only message able to unite people of more than 700 languages and cultures. They built airstrips in difficult places and even today the only contact for hundreds of small groups is by Mission Aviation.

Some countries produce stamps depicting things outside their own land and have resorted to many approaches to sell stamps. PNG has resisted this gimmick and has maintained a policy of producing serious stamps relevant to the country. They retain a photographic quality and accuracy rather than using cartoon figures, line drawings or abstract subjects. Because of this, our stamps are highly regarded and eagerly sought by collectors around the world.

Most of us buy our sheets of stamps without thinking about how they were produced. Information printed in the sheet margins gives some clues.

….PNG’s world class stamps truly are model ambassadors. They are attractive, do their job well, are highly respected and admired wherever they travel and are eagerly welcomed into the homes of those who meet them. To overseas friends who know PNG, they surely must bring back the scent of frangipani, the song of the birds and the never to- be- forgotten voices of children singing; “Jungles and rivers, white coral sands, this is my country, this is my land”.
